Understanding Active and Passive Voice

Active and passive voice are fundamental concepts in English grammar that describe the relationship between the subject and the action of a sentence. In active voice sentences, the subject performs the action expressed by the verb, delivering clear and direct communication. Conversely, passive voice sentences shift the focus to the recipient of the action, often including a form of the verb "to be" followed by the past participle of the main verb.

Definition and Examples of Active Voice

The active voice features a subject that acts upon the verb. This construction is straightforward and commonly used in both written and spoken English. For example, "The teacher explains the lesson" is an active voice sentence where "the teacher" is the subject performing the action "explains."

Definition and Examples of Passive Voice

In passive voice sentences, the subject receives the action rather than performing it. An example is "The lesson is explained by the teacher," where "the lesson" is the subject receiving the action "is explained." Passive constructions often emphasize the action's recipient or omit the doer altogether.
