The questions are based on a diverse selection of nonfiction passages, including essays, speeches, letters, and other rhetorical works. These texts often require students to analyze tone, purpose, rhetorical devices, and argumentation techniques.

Familiarity with the format helps students allocate time efficiently and approach questions with confidence. Effective preparation involves not only practicing questions but also developing a deep understanding of how authors construct meaning and persuade their audience.

Format and Timing

The AP Language multiple choice section is strictly timed, with about one minute per question. This requires quick comprehension and decision-making skills. Students must read passages carefully but efficiently, identifying key elements that the questions target.
